UTILIZING THE EVERGLADES

If three million acres of Florida Everglades land were utilized to capacity a great industrial as well as agricultural center could be built up in this state, according to the All Florida Committee. This would mean the establishment of at least a hundred industrial plants employing a half million workers.

The All Florida Committee's advertisement, urging support for a statewide advertising program to bring more people to Florida, and to develop the state's latent resources, appears in this newspaper today under the heading: "Millions of Acres Beg for Industry."

Only one per cent, or 30,000 of the 3,000,000 Everglades acres, is under cultivation at the present time. The committee points out that ten million dollars of government money is now being spent to improve the drainage of the land and to prevent overflow from Lake Okechobee.

The successful production of raw sugar from 12,500 acres, cited as an example of future development. Winter vegetables grown in this area, now include green beans, lima beans, tomatoes, corn, cabbage and cauliflower. Shipments reach a volume of 60 carloads a day to northern markets at the peak of the season.

The committee also calls attention to the large quantities of peanuts which are shipped to northern peanut butter factories each year. A tough fiber which can be used in automobile tire manufacture and the goldenrod plant developed by the late Thomas Edison for rubber manufacture can be grown successfully in this region and would result in a source of material for industrial enterprises.

The present membership of the All Florida Committee includes newspapers, radio stations and outdoor advertising plants. A drive for membership and support of a national advertising campaign is planned for this summer. A unified advertising program, the committee believes, would bring population to Florida and result in development of the state's agricultural, industrial, and commercial resources. Palm Beach Post.

FLORIDA VEGETABLES
The Florida Grower, a monthly magazine devoted largely to the citrus fruit industry, declares that "many fail to realize the importance of winter vegetable production in Florida. Of particular interest is the statement that 'Palm Beach county markets $10,000,000 worth of snap beans during a season.'"

Those visitors returning from the All-Everglades Fair at Belle Glade received an education in viewing the exhibits and learning at first hand what the Glades state is capable of producing. As The Grower says, trucking operations last season produced a tidy little sum of $16,000,000, and goes on to say:

Many fail to realize the importance of winter vegetable production in Florida. The producers understand that vegetable growing in this state makes possible a quick turnover and that truck fields properly managed are profitable. The banks in the vegetable growing sections can testify that the vegetable business brings many millions of dollars into the state annually. Does the individual grower in Palm Beach county, for instance, know that federal reports credit the county with $1,013,000 worth of winter vegetables in a season? Does the celery grower of Seminole county realize that the county's winter crop of celery is valued at $1,013,000?

But how many people, even in Florida, understand that this vegetable business brings many millions of dollars into the state annually? Does the individual grower in Palm Beach county, for instance, know that federal reports credit the county with $1,013,000 worth of winter vegetables in a season? Does the celery grower of Seminole county realize that the county's winter crop of celery is valued at $1,013,000? ## TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

By Russell Kay.

I have been reading in the Port Myers News-Press about a fellow down at Clewiston who has gone Communist or Bolsheviki or something, and is now making a lot of money on a 20-acre farm.

The amazing thing is that he seems to be doing it all by himself. He hasn't asked his congressman for free seeds, won't mess up with the N.Y.A. and doesn't seem to be interested in Federal Aid, and hasn't written Mr. Wallace about Palm Beach Post.

As nearly as I am able to find out, this queer egg seems to have the unusual idea that it is his duty to support the government, he's got no business asking the government to support him.

Imagine a guy with such crazy ideas in this day and age. First thing you know, some investment will have him on the list as Public Enemy number one and so. There ought to be a law against fellows cutting up and carrying on like that.

Why even the stuff he's growing is against the rules. Rubular, in agine, why everybody knows you can't grow rubular successfully in Florida, anyhow not commercially. Agricultural experts decided that a long time ago. But this fellow down at Clewiston went right ahead and did it anyhow.

He not only has twenty acres of rubular under cultivation, but he's selling it. That's another outrageous thing. A farmer growing a crop that he can't sell is a fool, but he goes so far as to actually sell it, the matter certainly ought to be looked into.

About the time all the rest of the farmers were busy plowing up every third row, this chap decided to let 'em play around with their cabbages and tomatoes while he found something that the market would flood with; so he went haywire and planted a mess of rubular.

Some folks felt downright sorry for him and others wanted to send him to Chattanooga. The rubular was hopeless when it got mixed up with that rich Clewiston muck. It just couldn't do a thing. But he wouldn't let it go. The harvest was 20 tons to the acre.

The grower learned that the price in New York for the rubular was anywhere from 17 to 60 cents a pound dried. The winter crop was pretty sure of at least 25 cents a pound. He got out a pencil and paper and did some figuring and found that with 20 acres, and 20 tons an acre, the answer was a whole helluva lot of money at 25 cents a pound.

A lot of rubular in the ground at this time. 25 to 30 cents a pound in New York presented a problem in geography but Mr. E. S. Keppeler was the kind of a guy who could make ends meet. He has this rubular business by the tail, and he's not going to let it go. He's got 5,000 pounds on a truck and sent his son north with it. He put away and did local peddling.

New York took that rubular with open arms and yelled for it. The local markets did the same. Mr. Keppeler was able to pay off the mortgage, get a new car, a new refrigerator, buy a new electric refrigerator and have enough left over to insure an ear to smile from his bankers every time they happen to meet on the street.

If everything goes into the rubular business it won't be long, of course, until they'll be plowing it up along with everything else, so here's hoping the folks down there will use some judgment.

There are just as many other crops that offer just as great an opportunity as rubular. It's up to you to find out. It can't be done but the fellow who goes ahead and does it anyhow, like Mr. Keppeler, is a fellow who's got a head on his shoulders.

While the cups were all won by Palatka, when one takes into consideration the difference in curriculum between the two schools and the talent from which to draw, the fact that South Bay came within one point of tying Palatka for first in the literary contest and second in the athletic events, gives the patrons an excellent idea of how their children are progressing in comparison to those of other Everglades schools. This is the first of what is hoped will be an annual Field Day for the Everglades schools. These literary and athletic contests are of great value in the training of our young people, who, thus stimulated by friendly rivalry between schools, will be securing valuable experience for life friendly competition to be met in the world of every day after school days are passed.

State Park Proposed For Highlands County The first forestry park has been accepted by the trustees of the internal improvement fund under recently enacted legislation directing the Florida Forest Service to investigate suitable sites for state forest, state parks, and reforestation projects, and to make recommendations to the trustees.

The first selection was of 860 acres of land adjoining Highlands Hammock in Highlands County. This area lies between Sebring and Zephyr Springs near the Hardee County line. The area was deeded to the state by the trustees of the Highlands Hammock Association, Incorporated, which administers Highlands Hammock, one of Florida's most beautiful hammocks. This land was purchased and made accessible through the generosity and thoughtfulness of the late Margaret Shippen Roebeling and her husband, John A. Roebeling, now of New Jersey and Florida.

The area has been declared a state park by the trustees. The Florida Forest Service has been authorized to administer and proceed with work in connection with its development as a park and as a reforestation area. It will be the site of the proposed Florida Botanical Garden and Arboretum, work on which will be started by a Civilian Conservation Corps camp located near Sebring. This camp will be under the supervision of the National Park Service. The Florida Botanical Garden and Arboretum Association will plan and direct the construction of the gardens and arboretum, which it is anticipated, will be the most outstanding in the country.

"AS EARTH TURNS" PICTURE MADE FROM BEST SELLER

Glady's Hasty Carrol's record smashing novel, "As the Earth Turns," which has been dramatized for the screen by Warner Bros. comes to the Prince Theatre Sunday and Monday.

This saga of New England rural life, the first novel by Miss Carroll, has taken such an astounding grip on popular fancy that it has broken all records as a best seller. The story, an epic of American life, has been dramatized by Ernest Pascal, himself an author of note, and should prove to be a powerful and dynamic picture.

The characterizations have been wonderful and realistically drawn from the lives of the rugged New England pioneer types and are said to be portrayed by an unusual cast, each member of which was carefully selected because of his or her peculiar fitness for the part.

Jeon Muir, the tall, stately blonde former stage player, who has recently leaped to leading picture roles, has the feminine lead of Jen, a farmer's daughter who loves the soil that has nurtured her and whose strong sense of values holds even her love life in check until the man she cares for has demonstrated his own deep attachment for the good earth.

Donald Woods, a youth who has attracted considerable attention on the stage, makes his picture bow in "As the Earth Turns" as Miss Muir's lover, the city boy who reverts to the farm. Dorothy Appleby is the disturbing element of the drama, her erotic nature and flirtatious manner nearly wrecking the love of Jen and Muir.

The settings are said to be especially unique and picturesque, three complete farms having been built at the Warner studios for the reproduction of the scenes.
